

43rd Meeting of the Society for Cryobiology in association with the Society for Low Temperature Biology

Hamburg, July 24 – 27, 2006
Venue: Hamburg Chamber of Commerce

Society for Low
Temperature Biology (SLTB)

WORDS OF WELCOME

It is both a pleasure and an honor to invite you to the 43rd Annual Meeting of the Society for Cryobiology which will be held in association with the Society for Low Temperature Biology in Hamburg.

The meeting will cover a wide range of subjects including hypothermia, physiology of resistance to cold in plants, and applications of cryobiology in conservation, surgery, cell, tissue and organ preservation. Relevant aspects of biology, molecular biology, physics, chemistry, physical chemistry, biochemistry, physiology, medicine, transfusion medicine, mechanical engineering, tissue engineering and transplantation will also be covered. We especially try to attract young scientists for presentation of their most recent developments in the field. There will be reduced registration fees for young scientists and travel awards will be linked to the scientific achievements. The Peter L. Steponkus Crystal Award competition has been scheduled for the presentation of these contributions.

The Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg, one of the 16 states of the Federal Republic of Germany, is the second largest city in Germany with 1.74 million inhabitants. In this sense it is a city as well as a state. Hamburg is also culturally and commercially the center of all of Northern Germany. The metropolitan region consists of 3.5 million people and for all of them, Hamburg is the shopping and cultural metropolis. Hamburg boasts 2302 bridges, more than the total of all bridges of Venice and Amsterdam taken together. With more than 90 consulates, Hamburg ranks second to New York as the city with the most consulates in the world. Hamburg has always been an open-minded commercial center, something that has influenced the mentality of the people living here.

Come and visit us here in Hamburg, we shall happily express our hospitality. Let us make CRYO 2006 a feast of science and a feast for scientists.

Yours sincerely,

Andreas Sputtek
Conference Chairman
